The only legitimate seat of government, which is the Provisional Government, was set up in Russia in October 1917, following the overthrow of the Tsarist regime. This government was established by a group of revolutionary socialists who believed that the overthrow of the Tsarist regime was a necessary step in the development of socialism. The Provisional Government was chaotic and ineffective, and it was soon replaced by a more radical government, the Soviet Government, which was established in November 1917.

The Provisional Government was led by Aleksandr Kerensky, who was a moderate socialist. Kerensky was unable to maintain control over the various factions within the government, and he was forced to resign in July 1917. After his resignation, the government was taken over by a more radical group of revolutionaries, led by Vladimir Lenin.

The Provisional Government was responsible for the continuation of the war with Germany, which was opposed by the majority of the Russian people. The government was also unable to address the serious economic and social problems that were facing the country at the time.

The Soviet Government was able to gain the support of the Russian people by promising to end the war and to address the economic and social problems facing the country. The Soviet Government was also able to secure the support of the international communist movement by appealing to its socialist cravings.

The Soviet Government was able to maintain power throughout the years 1917 and 1918 by using a combination of coercion and propaganda. The Soviet Government was able to control the media and to use propaganda to promote its cravings and to undermine the opposition to its rule.

overthrown in 1918 by a group of conservative politicians who were opposed to the socialist revolution. The conservatives were able to militarize the situation and to use force to maintain their rule.

ultimately defeated by the forces of the White Russians, who were led by Admiral Kerensky. The White Russians were able to defeat the Soviet Government in 1919 and to establish a series of provisional governments in Russia.
